Classic Soldier Story

By C.G. Wells

And a Hard Rain Fell is a classic soldier story, probably the best to come out of the Vietnam War. It's lessons are timeless and applicable to today's combat operations. This is a well told story that is hard to put down and even harder to forget.

Waste of trees

By D. C. Carrad

In his new introduction the author quotes a highly-decorated Sergeant Major who spoke recently at a conference on Vietnam. The Sergeant Major commented that the "whiners and losers" who make up a tiny minority of Vietnam veterans have come to be more and more discredited with each passing year, and that their grandchildren would read the real history of Vietnam written by other, braver men. This would have been a very good place for this book to stop. It is a lengthy, self-absorbed, navel-gazing moan from a guy who didn't have a particularly tough (or interesting) tour of duty. I was there too (June 1968-June 1969) and it wasn't anything like what this book claims. Ketwig enlisted (not drafted), volunteered for OCS, etc. and then found adjustment to military life painful and discovered he was not up to the task. It was easy in those days to turn on the military and betray your buddies to get attention and popularity. So here is the less-than-compelling saga of a not very interesting motor mechanic's tour in Nam and dull life afterward. If you are interested in what company clerks, chaplain's assistants and REMFs thought about the war, I suppose you could read this. Infinitely better are In Pharaoh's Army, by Tobia Wolfe; The Names of the Dead, by Stewart O'Nan; After Tet, by Ronald Spector; and Stolen Valor, by J.G. Burkett. This book is a grave disservice to everyone who served in Vietnam and our national forests. How it ever found its way into print is a mystery.

The writer was lost

By Amazon Customer

This story is complete crap. I spent my year in Viet Nam in the very same area and know the lay of the land very, very well. Here's a guy in Army transportation of all things who doesn't even know the name of the highway between Pleiku, Kontum, Dak To and Ben Het, yet he claims to have had all manner of adventures there. He says it's Highway 1. For his information, Highway 1 goes along the coast. The name of the highway where he spent a YEAR driving north and south, over a hundred miles inland, is Highway 14. How can one take any of this fabrication seriously??
