So so

Not enough detail to really run a first event. There aren't any tools like timelines or checklists to help. I think professional timing is a much bigger expense than he makes it out.

A MUST for planning your first 5K!

By 5K Novice

I work for a local non profit and we were brainstorming recently about having a 5K/10K race as a fundraiser for our organization. None of us had any knowledge of planning such an event. Ironically, during this timeframe of brainstorming, I came across Ryan Stefonick's book, "The Event Director's Guide: How to host a 5K Run and earn Thousands for Profit" via a Facebook post promoting it.

I found the book to be extremely thorough, detail oriented and an excellent resource for someone who has never planned a 5K. So many valid points were discussed and things you would not think to think of for a 5K. It involves a lot of detail planning, especially in the early stages, in order for it to be a success.

I would highly recommend this book for anyone, especially a nonprofit, who is thinking about putting on a 5K event.

This book will definitely be our guideline and go to resource to plan our 5K.

Thank you Ryan for your expertise and knowledge and for sharing this with everyone!

A lot shorter than I thought it would be

By matthew archibald

Good info, just thought it would be a lot more in depth. As it is it is more like a glorified essay than a book.
